From email: "This afternoon en route back to Livingston from Idaho, lots of slide activity at all elevations…

The first picture is the cornice collapse. One block in the debris pile was probably the size of my airplane - a giant ass snowball.

The next few photos are wet slab a mile north along the same ridge, location: approximately 1-2 miles SW of the coordinate photo (it took me a minute to get cords up). Elevation of both approximately 9,800-10,000.

Too many point releases to count in every range I've crossed today…"
